... Annual General Meeting 2020 in January, on which nothing has changed, but I would still like to comment on it again. Siemens, like Siemens Energy, is committed to the UN Principles on Business and Human Rights and the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises, and there is no compromise on these principles. We take this responsibility and the necessary human rights due diligence, which is associated to it, very, very seriously. Of course also the mentioned right to self-determination, and we examine independently at any time how this human rights risk assessment is to be classified. We refer to it (?) ... in a so-called Human rights risk assessment, whose method we will also use to carry out an assessment in the case of Western Sahara. Against the background of political tensions, we are following the human rights risks in the region of Western Sahara very closely and are in continuous dialogue with external experts. We are aware that the region of Western Sahara is ...? as non-self-governing. We support the position of the international community and the United Nations towards a peaceful solution to the conflict. Both Siemens and Siemens Gamesa, have obtained external and independent risk assessments on several, several, occasions in recent years; the results of these assessments will, of course, be taken into account in the envisaged human rights risk assessment. The formulation of Siemens Gamesa's corporate strategy is the responsibility of Siemens Gamesa's management, which will be guided by the relevant legal framework. Siemens Energy will pay attention to this in the board within the scope of its possibilities under company law, as you know, we have majorities.
